Ann Radmore has been appointed as the Service's new Chief Executive.

Ann, who is currently the Chief Executive of NHS South West London, will take up her role with us in January.

Speaking about her appointment, Ann said: "I very much look forward to working with the London Ambulance Service to play my part in taking these essential services for Londoners from strength to strength and developing them as part of the integrated care services of the future."

Non-executive directors join board

Nicholas Martin took up his role as non-executive director on 1 October. Nicholas, who has 30 years' experience of working in corporate finance, said: "It's a great privilege to join the London Ambulance Service and a particular pleasure to do so shortly after their excellent performance during the high profile events in London this summer."

John Jones has started as an associate non-executive director, and will take up his substantive role on 1 January 2013. John, who has held a number of executive finance director roles in the NHS, said: "I'm delighted to join the London Ambulance Service at this exciting time. As an associate director I'm more of an observer finding out about the Service before I take up my role formally in the new year."
